COMMUNICATED THE RECENT CHARGE OF RAPE.

Philip Bigler, charged with rape upon ton appeared as counsel,) and was released by Justice Morsell, we, in justice to the accused. who has always sustained a good character, and in compliance with his wishes, publish the following decision of the magistrate in

"I have listened with pleasure and attention to the able, eloquent, and interesting argument of your lawyer, and you are indebted to him for your escape, because my first impres sions were against you. But I agree with Mr. Carrington, that no magistrate should expose any man who has always borne a good character, to the mortification of a public trial, upon a charge involving such serious conseuences unless he is fully satisfied that there is 'probable cause,' and that his duty clearly demands it. For this reason, I have patiently and carefully examined the various author ities to which I was referred by your counsel and others upon the same subject, and have, after due reflection, arrived at the following conclusions: That, to prove a case of 'rape, there must be some evidence of this sort: That narcotics were administered; or that many were engaged against the female who complains; or that a strong man made an attack upon a female who has not arrived at the age of puberty; or that fear or terror operated upon a helpless famale; or that she resisted for a long time, and then fainted from sistance; or that there was a constant and equal resistance on the part of the person violated; or that there is an evident inequality of strength between the parties; or that she has raised cries; or that there are some marks of violence present; or that the person violated presently discovered the offence, and made search for the offender; or that the person accused fled in consequence of the accusation. Some evidence of this sort is necessary to sustain the charge of rape. But on the other hand, if the prosecution be of evil fame, or if she stand unsupported by other evidence, or if she conceal the injury for a long time after she had an opportunity to complain, or if the place where the act was alleged to have been committed were such that it was possible she might have been heard, and she made no outery. These and the like circumstances carry a strong presumption that her testimoney is false or feigned. And it behooves the Justice to scrutinize her testimony cautiously and closely, and guard against a false sympathy natural to every man, when a woman complains of such an outrage upon her person. . hese are the principles clearly laid dewn by Wharton, Achabold, Russell, and Blackstone; and after a fair, careful and impartial application of these principles to the facts in this case. I have determined to dismiss it. And my epinion is confirmed when I consider that it was brought out upon cross-examination by your counsel that the prosecutrix and her family endeavored to extort money from you.
